CHINESE THESPIANS

Their New Theater Is Opened.

A DRAMA OF THE DAY

War and Love Mixed in the Grand Performance of the Opening Night.

The new Chinese theater on Liliha street played to large business for the first time last night. The house has a seating capacity of about 1,200 and consists of a parquet and gallery. General admission is 25 cents.

There are no footlights, the illumination coming from six oil lamps suspended immediately above the stage. The orchestra is situated in a place especially reserved for it at the back of the stage.
In other details the fixtures are on the scale of those at a cheap vaudeville house, with the exception that every thing is of the plainest possible order, no attempt at ornamentation having been made.

The spectator on making his entree to the house during play hours is confronted with a sea of straw hats and a smell of wet paint. The next thing that attracts his attention is the music rendered by five performers, two tride, with surprising gusto, with unnameable instruments.
It is a bad piece for a man with a headache.

The majority of those present are Chinese interspersed with a few natives, Japs and curious haoles. There are few women and many children.

With a flourish of clanging instruments the curtain rises and six men fearfully and wonderfully garbed are discovered in the act of mortal combat.

They fight, they die, and the house is filled with the shrieks of the dying, which scent the air with blood. The emperor's troops are routed by the rebels and their leader appeals in vain for reinforcements.

In the second act a man appears in a garden; he is hungry and has helped himself to lichee nuts which are not his own. He gorges till he falls asleep. Two damsels enter and reward him with surprise and scorn. He is evidently, in their estimation, a bad fellow. They avoid him.

Suddenly one of the ladies approaches him and hits him on the head with her fan. He wakes up. She runs.

The ladies do a pleasing fan act for ten minutes and then ask the intruder what he does there.

He tells them that he is the son of a millionaire on his way to be examined for the bar and adds that he has been robbed.

The lady says that by a strange coincidence she is a millionaire's child, too, and proposes to him then and there.
They kneel down on rugs brought for the purpose by the property man and the engagement is on.

The fiance then sings a song in a manner which would have done credit to a Cherry sister and no eggs are thrown.

After the song the man makes use of the orchestra for ten minutes and the girl's father appears on the scene clad richly in whiskers which woo the floor.

The young man touches his father-in-law for $2,000 and passes his examination with honors in mathematics and surgery, after which a wedding occurs and the gentlemen who dust the pots and pans feelingly render Lohengrin in Chinese.

Also the man is initiated into the illustrious order of the peacock's feather.

When the husband gets a sufficient stand-in with the family he seeks to retrieve the defeat of the imperial troops by the rebels, in the first act. He calls for volunteers and appoints a wood-chopper commander in chief of the recruits.

More fighting in the third act and the total defeat of the rebels by the wood-chopper's men (the wood-chopper weds the maid of the bride as a reward for valor) and the curtain falls mid a fanfare of frying pans.

Over the stage reposed a legend which read, "He Who Patronizes This Show Will Become Rich"; there was nothing mentioned, however, about the state of the manager's health.

The wings of the stage were thronged with about fifty "men" and men with a pull at headquarters—it was difficult to determine which.

Everything went as smoothly as could be desired, considering that it was first night and the actors did nothing wrong but sing.

That the enterprise is in touch with the Orpheum circuit, a refreshment bar and a "Free list entirely suspended" notice would seem to indicate. A remarkable feature of the entertainment to a stranger was the fact that the performance was entirely devoid of applause.

Lucien Young Again.

A delightful hop was given at Havana, Cuba, on New Year's eve, which was the first of a series arranged by officers of the army and navy and marine hospital on duty at Havana. Through the kindness of Lieutenant Commander Lucien Young, U. S. N., the hop was held in the building of the Comandancia General de la Marina. The building had been decorated tastefully by those in charge. At the entrance was a large sized floral anchor with the word "Welcome" inscribed thereon. The reception hall was a bower of evergreens and flowers and large American flags. The Second Artillery band dispensed delightful music during the evening and at the hour of 11:57 played "taps," at 12:01 "reveille," followed by "America." Refreshments were served and thoroughly enjoyed, especially at this hour, when everyone was wishing one another a happy New Year. The committee who had charge of this pretty function were Lieutenant E. C. Brooks, Sixth U. S. Cavalry, president; Lieutenant Commander Lucien Young, U. S. N.; Captain P. Mothersill, U. S. A.; Captain George F. Barney, Second U. S. Artillery; Dr. Rafael O. Marcour, U. S. N.; Lieutenant Edward Carpenier, Second Artillery, U. S. A., and Lieutenant Upton Birnie, Jr., Second U. S.
Artillery. Nearly 300 guests were present.
—Army and Navy Journal.

One night, at the Garrick Club, a number of the members were discussing the merits of a new Hamlet who had appeared that evening. W. S. Gilbert had taken no part in the arguments, for or against. At last one of the others ventured: "Well, Gilbert, what do you think of his Hamlet?" "Oh," responded the witty librettist, "I think it was funny without being vulgar."
